1. Purpose and scope

This standard defines the product categories sold through the fictional Flatkart marketplace and the conditions under which a customer may request a replacement. It is intended to be used alongside the Return, Refund & Cancellation Policy. If a category-specific condition is stricter than the general rule, the category-specific condition applies, provided it is displayed on the product page before purchase.

Replacement is a remedy for an eligible product issue; it is not an automatic entitlement for every product or every reason. Requests remain subject to order verification, evidence review where appropriate, stock availability, and the stated eligibility window.

2. Replacement eligibility at a glance

Customers may request a replacement when an item arrives damaged, is materially defective, is materially different from the item ordered, or a required component is missing. The customer should report the issue within 7 calendar days of delivery. The delivery date is the carrier-confirmed delivery date, not the date on which the customer first opens the package.

Replacement is subject to inspection or reasonable verification. If an identical item is unavailable, Flatkart may offer a refund or another remedy permitted by the applicable order terms. Customer support must not promise an exchange date until inventory and logistics have been checked.

3. Category rules

Electronics and accessories: replacement requests are accepted for transit damage, dead-on-arrival units, material functional defects present on arrival, or an incorrect model/variant. Serial numbers, IMEI numbers where applicable, and included accessories may be checked. Damage caused after delivery, unauthorized repair, liquid exposure, or physical modification is not covered by this replacement standard.

Home and kitchen: replacement requests may be accepted for breakage on arrival, manufacturing defects, missing essential parts, or an incorrect item. Products must be returned with all included parts. Normal wear, installation damage caused by the customer, and cosmetic differences accurately disclosed on the product page are not eligible.

Fashion and footwear: replacement requests may be accepted for a wrong item, wrong size sent by Flatkart, a manufacturing defect, or damage on arrival. Change-of-mind size or style exchanges are not guaranteed and depend on the product page's category terms and available stock. Items should be unworn, unwashed, with original tags and packaging where supplied.

Books, stationery and media: replacement requests may be accepted for significant transit damage, missing pages or components, or a wrong title/edition. Minor packaging scuffs that do not affect use are not normally treated as product defects.

Personal-care, hygiene-sealed, and intimate-use goods: opened or unsealed items are not eligible for change-of-mind return or replacement. A wrong item or transit damage may be reviewed by support; customers should not use a product that appears unsafe or tampered with.

Digital goods, gift cards, downloadable products, and activated software: these are generally not eligible for replacement after delivery or activation, except where the product is inaccessible, materially defective, or the law or specific product terms require another remedy.

4. Exclusions and rejection grounds

A request may be declined where the issue is reported after the applicable window; the product shows damage consistent with misuse or an accident after delivery; required serial numbers or identifying labels have been removed or altered; the product has been repaired or modified without authorization; the claimed issue cannot be verified after reasonable review; or the product page clearly identified the relevant limitation before purchase.

Support must record the specific reason for any rejection and explain the review or escalation option. Do not use a generic 'policy violation' reason when a specific reason is available. This standard does not override mandatory consumer rights or applicable law.

5. Evidence and handling

Useful evidence may include clear photographs of the item, outer shipping packaging, shipping label, damaged area, serial number, or a short video showing a functional fault. Evidence should be proportionate to the issue; support must not request passwords, payment card security codes, or unrelated personal information.

After approval, the customer receives return or pickup instructions. Customers should not ship an item to an address supplied in an unofficial message. The returned item is checked against the approved request before replacement dispatch or an alternative remedy is finalized.

6. Examples

Example A — A blender arrives with a cracked jar and the customer reports it two days after delivery: eligible for review as transit damage.

Example B — A customer drops a phone ten days after delivery and asks for a replacement: not eligible under this arrival-issue standard because the damage occurred after delivery and the request is outside the standard window.

Example C — A customer receives a blue shirt instead of the black shirt ordered and reports it within seven days: eligible for review as an incorrect item.

Example D — A sealed hygiene product arrives with a visibly broken seal: do not advise the customer to use it; route to support for a safety and delivery-condition review.
